INTRODUCTION

This section of SAAM deals with the rather problematic matter of State employees accepting gifts. A.R.S. §§ 38-503 through 38-505 prohibits an officer or employee of the State from accepting “any valuable thing or valuable benefit” that would not accrue to the officer or employee in the performance of his service to the State. These statutes, however, do not establish a monetary threshold for what would be considered valuable. The R2-5A-501 of the A.A.C. states that an employee shall not “accept or solicit...anything of economic value as a gift...that is, or may appear to be, designed to influence the employee’s official conduct,” but does not prohibit accepting “food, refreshments, or unsolicited advertising or promotional material of nominal value.” A monetary amount for what constitutes economic value or what is meant by nominal is not prescribed. SAAM establishes fifty dollars ($50) as a de minimis value for reporting non-monetary prizes and awards, but deals specifically with prizes and awards made by the State to its employees.

This section of SAAM establishes the circumstances under which and the value of gifts, other than prizes and awards made by the State, that may be accepted by officers and employees of the State.

POLICIES

3. Except as proscribed above:
